President Taft Attends Services at All Souls' Church.

LARGE CROWDS AT WORSHIP

General Observance Today of the Legal Holiday, and the Tired Toilers Are Seeking

With the one-hundred-and-one celebrations of yesterday already faint memories, Washington early this morning began the more general secular observance

The religious significance of the feast yesterday overshadowed the merry outthe festive pent-up spirit.

The double holiday which ends tonight s being enjoyed by the government clerks, and especially by the clerks of the stores who toiled early and late for the last month to make Christmas a happy event for others. There were few business houses open in the city today, and in the government buildings no one was astir except the watchmen.

lated Christmas gifts at dawn. Although there was but one mail delivery today, starting from the main building at 7:30 o'clock this morning, the express companies are busy.

Like all Washingtonians, President Taft went to church in the morning and spent the remainder of the day with his family by the White House fireside. The President walked to All Souls' Church unattended shortly before 11 o'clock and remained throughout the services. He met a few friends on leaving and walked back to the Executive Mansion, where he joined the family at dinner. Mrs. Taft, Miss Helen Taft and Charlie Taft attended services at St. John's Episcopal Church. Presents were distributed at the White House dinner.

White House dinner. Chief Justice White attended high mass at St. Matthew's Church at 11 o'clock. Rev. Father Sirvent, a Spanish priest, celebrated the mass, assisted by Rev. Father Bucker and Rev. Father Cooper. Mrs. White attended midnight mass in the same church.

Ambassador de la Barra and the Spanish ambassador attended morning mass at St. Matthew's Church also, and Baron Hengelmuller, the ambassador from Austria-Hungary, the Baroness Hengelmuller and Baroness Mils attended the 11 o'clock at St. Patrick's.
